This might be a waterfront plan for everyone, but everyone in the Mayors plan includes developers, to whom we will be giving away increased density and the ability to build hotels, which are not allowed in the current zoning. Changing the zoning would not be required for a museum or parkland. This is short term thinking, as hotels are a trend. They might not do well over the long term, or be the best long term use for these three sites.

If the plan is to prevent privatization of the waterfront, as planning director Farroll Hamer said at last weeks planning commission meeting, then these three sites should be neither townhouses, office nor hotels, but be required to be public uses. Since it is not possible to mandate this, then let us not up zone these properties before we can talk about increasing incentives to move in this direction. It is time to turn the tide from the mind set of development being the only way to pay for improvements to the public space. Through better management we can get there without the trade-off of trying to compete with National Harbor.

It is paramount that we continue to put pressure on the Washington Post to consider other benefits to their shareholders besides development for the two sites they own. There are public relations benefits to working with citizens to develop the sites for public uses. For instance, with the Posts partnership, we could expand the Alexandria Seaport Foundation into a center for wooden boats, creating jobs, and know how. Visitors and residents can watch students and apprentices building boats much like they watch artists now in the Torpedo Factory.

The Art League site could be developed it into a permanent home and center for art. If we want a vibrant creative waterfront, enabling artists to teach, and make a living adds to that. Instead we are allowing them to be pushed out, caving in to the pressure from developers for a hotel that has already been proposed for that site by Carr properties. The Cummings family, owners of The Interarms Company, that was located in these warehouses, should also be encouraged to consider the philanthropic benefits, like tax incentives, of working with the city and the Art League.

These three sites are probably the three most desirable development sites in the city, but they are also desirable for the highest and best possible use for the public, not just the private property owners, and we have the opportunity to determine their future and ours.

We would like the Mayor and city council to give the community over the summer to digest the plan and propose alternatives means of financing improvements before we change the zoning. If the Mayor wants support for the plan, he has to do more than say that some people support it and that some organizations support parts of it. This does not equal agreement. We need to postpone passage of this plan to give the public and the citizens time to propose alternatives, and we have a plan we all can agree on.

Does our Waterfront plan live up to these qualities

10 Qualities of Great Waterfronts according to Partnership for Public Spaces: PPS.org

1. Surrounding Buildings Enhance Public Space: The hotels that are being proposed do not necessarily add life to the public spaces like waterfront park and Founders park. Restoration of historic buildings will also enhance visitors knowledge of our historic waterfront, while hotels will not.

2. Limits are Placed on Residential Development: No limits are being set on either residential or office development. Also no incentives have been put in to encourage the owners of the three parcels to include public amenities in their projects. The language is not more restrictive but encourages larger development.

3. Activities go on Round-the-Clock and Throughout the Year: The waterfront should be focused around different activities that can be indoors or out. Hotels are not an attraction that provides activity on the waterfront. Public ownership of more than just pathways will provide room for more programming. The city can partner with existing non-profits to run programming.

4. Flexible Design Fosters Adaptability: Public ownership of more of the waterfront will provide maximum flexibility to program activities. Hotels may not be sustainable over the long term, but once they are built there is no turning back. We need to explore whether the Washington Post or the Cummings family will work or partner with the city to make sure their properties have the maximum public benefit, as opposed to the maximum private benefit.

5. Creative Amenities Boost Everyone's Enjoyment: The art walk should be fully funded, and the Torpedo Factory and Art league should be given more opportunity to program activities. The history plan should also be fully funded. There could also be a theater included on one of the sites.

6. Access Made Easy by Boat, Bike and Foot: This plan does not integrate into King St. or address the safety issues at the corner of King and Union. Besides the water Taxi, it should provide more access to the water.

7. Local Identity is Showcased: "The greatest waterfront destinations are found in cities that truly orient themselves to the water. Making the most of local identity, history and culture stimulates widespread interest in the waterfront and creates a unique sense of place. Frequent opportunities to appreciate local art, music and theatre helps draw a community together around the waterfront."

8. The Water Itself Draws Attention: "The water itself is the greatest asset of any waterfront, and should become the centerpiece for programming and activities." Alexandria was built around the water, and we should showcase it.

9. Iconic Buildings Serve a Variety of Functions: Hotels will not serve a variety of functions! They will not be iconic! Museums, and cultural centers serve a variety of functions, much like our Torpedo Factory does today, and could be designed as unique attractions, as opposed to pale imitations of colonial architecture.

10. Good Management Maintains Community Vision: "Management is essential to ensure that a successful waterfront stays that way. Such an organization would be very helpful in sustaining a diverse variety of activities and events throughout the year and implementing programs that can be used to generate revenue that benefits the waterfront as a whole."
